

Fulbright Canada recently celebrated the 10th anniversary of the Killam Fellowships Program. In our efforts to communicate this milestone, and to demonstrate the important role that Killam Fellows play in bringing the communities together, Killam Fellows were asked to donate a day to community service. On Friday, September 14th, the 2012-13 Killam Cohort went to Fletcher's Wildlife Garden, a centre that disseminates information on conservation issues and educates the community on how to create wildlife-friendly gardens. Students pulled an invasive plant species called Swallow-Wort. What our students did in one day would have taken the garden volunteers several weeks. Many hands make light work! Many thanks to Barry Cottam and the volunteers at FWG who gave our students tours of the garden and exhibited the most sincere hospitality.

Killam Fellows Volunteering in their Communities

"For my Killam Day of Action 2012, I chose to volunteer at an important cultural facility of my home state Colorado, the History Colorado Center. I volunteered at this center throughout the summer and dedicated a day to the Fulbright and Killam Foundation." _ Alia Gant

"Every year I organize and run a catch and release fishing derby for the children of Gambier Island, B.C. The goal is to teach the importance of respect and cohabitation with the marine life in our own front yard".
_Eliza Killam

"As a Killam Alumnus it was great to inspire other students I know to volunteer and help build on Congresswoman Giffords' vision to help fight hunger locally."
